

Profile edit Friends Inbox

home account privacy logout

Search

Applications edit

Photos

Video

Groups

Events

Notes

 Check It Out

more

Cleanse your Colon

Lose weight and reduce your cholesterol by cleansing your colon. As seen on the Oprah Show. Try the 100% natural ColonLeaf for free.

More Ads | Advertise

Update -- Notice to all Check It Out Users -- Effective Immediately

Back to Check It Out

Discussion Board | Topic View |

Start New Topic |

Topic: Update -- Notice to all Check It Out Users -- Effective Immediately

Reply to Topic

Displaying posts 1 - 30 out of 31 by 18 people.

1 2 Next

Post #1
6 replies

Vm App (Silicon Valley, CA) wrote
2 hours ago

Reply to Vm
Report

Thank for your support and enthusiasm, the response has been overwhelmingly positive. Our guiding principle is to help you stretch your household budget as far as possible, particularly in these challenging economic times. Please continue to help us with this goal as we address the current unfortunate situation. As many of you may have heard, our system was breeched resulting in the illegal spreading of fraudulent copies of our coupons via email or PDF. We are extremely saddened by this occurrence and understand the frustration that many of you feel, as we have families and children of our own.

That said, it has been several days since the print limits of our offers were reached. Unfortunately copies of the coupons are still being illegally circulated on the Internet, making it impossible to determine which are legitimate and which are not. Each of our coupons clearly states that "offer void if altered or copied".

Our teams are working diligently to resolve all issues so we can continue bringing you quality offers.

It is an unfortunate but sad reality; however, in order to protect our retailers and all of you responsible coupon users, all coupons will now be considered invalid copies. We are working with all industry players and word is going out to the retailers to not accept them.

The abuse by the few has lead to this decision which sadly affects the many.

Despite this setback, the overall result of our initial launch has been extremely successful. We are currently working with manufacturers and sponsors to bring you a wider range of offers based largely on the products that you told us you wanted to see.

Post #2

Stephanie Taylor (UNLV) wrote
2 hours ago

Reply to Stephanie
Report

This is ridiculous. I hope you plan on reimbursing stores for the coupons we legitimately printed out from your application; I don't want my local stores to think I am a fraudster.

In addition to this, the impact on legitimate internet coupons is going to be immense. Do you really think an untrained cashier will know the difference between a coupon with an unique barcode from Bricks or Smartsorce and one of your fake coupons? Stores are just going to refuse to accept any printed coupons when you tell them about your coupons.

And about the "abuse", did you bother to do any research into security measures or internet coupons in general? A simple google search would have shown you many cases in which high-value coupons could be printed more than once, leading to the company declaring them "fraudulent," even though they were obtained straight from the company's website (Nestle and Juicy Juice anyone?)

Jean Parks wrote
2 hours ago

Reply to Jean
Report

and what about us poor trusting saps who printed these coupons from

Post #3
1 reply

the Facebook site and used them in stores along with our store cards?

The thought that the police will be knocking on my door due to my committing coupon fraud makes me ill. This looks like a nice,planned easy way to gain publicity at the expense of innocent end users! Release high value coupons on one of the world's biggest online websites, garner tons of hits, then sit there and cry "fraud"

Do you seriously think ANY store is going to want to accept your coupons in the future after you pull this ? Do you think anybody here that gets burned by a store banning them or going after them legally is going to want to see another of your "exciting offers" ?

Aimee Jackson (Waco, TX) replied to vm's post

2 hours ago

Reply to Aimee
Report

Post #4
1 reply

well thats just great! First you issue a statement saying that if you got the q from the check it out app, you were fine and stores would be reimbursed. So I'm not worried and got to my local Brookshire Brothers and redeem the ones I got. Now you say, " gee guys, we are overwhelmed, so they are now ALL FRAUDULANT." I LIVE IN A SMALL TOWN, MY GROCER KNOWS ME AND RECOGNIZES ME! What do you think they are going to think of me when I go in next time and a memo has trickled down about Fraudulant coupons?

YOU SUCK! I and many others like me are now worried because you didnt plan properly? How is that our fault? If your site wasn't ready to launch and go live because security measures wern't in place then you people have some piss poor planning. If I was a vendor I wouldn't touch you with a 10 foot pole, and I will definately uninstall the Check it Out app.

Matt Simmons (Dothan, AL) wrote

2 hours ago

Reply to Matt
Report

Post #5

I think you should seriously think about the precautions before you launch such a thing. Having the ability to be printed to PDF printer is your own fault. That's why systems like Bricks.coupons.com are in place for Internet printables. Noone hacked your application or your site it was just poor planning and lack of security or thinking. All that was need was changing the "offer" number in the URL and whala you had another coupon. If you decide to make "test" coupons like you had mentioned on I Heart CVS then why not make them for .01 cent or something really cheap to the fact and maybe put VOID on them really big so if they were found they wouldn't be accepted.

I agree with Jean Parks your integrity of you application is comprimised and now once stores are notified that the coupons are ALL invalid what's the point of continued use of your coupons or application when its going to be a pain in the rear to get the places we shop with coupons to ever take your coupons again without looking like a fraud.

Aimee Jackson (Waco, TX) replied to Aimee's post

about an hour ago

Reply to Aimee
Report

Post #6
1 reply

Jesus Freakin CHRIST! I write a response, then click back to my profile and what do I see? More freaking Coupons from you guys! If they are now all void WHY are you still posting them!????!! GET IT TOGETHER!

Linda Doss wrote

about an hour ago

Reply to Linda
Report

Post #7

Will you be reimbursing the retailers for coupons used up until your announcement?

You stated YESTERDAY that the coupons printed out from your application were legitimate. Please assure us that the coupons we have already used will be honored, and our local stores will not be bilked by you.

Post #8

AJ Zhang (F & M) replied to vm's post

about an hour ago

Reply to AJ
Report

"all coupons will now be considered invalid copies."

i understand why you had to do this. But many people printed these coupons from your site, and now look very bad at their local stores. and you say sorry.

thats it? also im glad your business plan was "extremely successful."

the majority of people who viewed your response, printed the coupons from your site. now we get to see how great your doing, especially now that you dont have to reimburse any stores at all. of course your doing well. lol the silver lining i suppose is that in the future "vyrImrkt" will be associated with inexperience, and very, very poor customer relations.

Post #9

Aimee Jackson (Waco, TX) replied to Aimee's post

about an hour ago

Reply to Aimee
Report

So, who wants to jump on this bandwagon? I figure I'm holding approx 100.00 worth of worthless q's ( I only managed to redeem fiji water and CPK) I want my 100.00 bucks now. Thank you very much.

The law firm of Schneider Wallace Cottrell Brayton Konecky LLP handles class action lawsuits against some of the country's largest governmental entities and corporation firms including the following firms: UPS, Sears, FedEx, The University of California, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, The San Francisco Unified School District and others. Our law firms' lawyers are very experienced with these types of lawsuits.

A class action lawsuit allows one person or a small group of people to be represented by a law firm and sue on behalf of hundreds, thousands or hundreds of thousands of different people with similar complaints. Because there is strength in numbers, a class action lawsuit is a powerful tool that individuals can use to enforce the law against large corporate firms and government entities.

There are several factors that law firms must consider prior to bringing a lawsuit as a class action:

Numerosity - are there enough people affected by the illegal practice to warrant a class action

Commonality - do the affected people share common legal issues

Typicality - are the claims of the person(s) bringing the suit typical of those of the entire class

Adequacy of Representation - will the law firm bringing the case be willing and able to represent the interests of the entire class.

If you think that you have a potential class action claim, please fill out our online consultation form below. We have successfully tried many class actions. You can view a list of representative cases here.

We accept cases on a contingency fee basis, meaning we do not charge a fee unless you win.

Post #10
1 replyLarry Phillips (Texas San Antonio) replied to Jean's post

about an hour ago

Reply to Larry
Report

I agree with you 110%!

Thank you for the well-said comment! I couldn't have said it better myself!

I cannot believe you are claiming that all these coupons are fraudulent ... it makes me sick to think that I wasted my ink, paper, and time to print coupons that I can no longer use. I really hope that my store gets reimbursed for the coupons I managed to use before you decided to call them fraudulent. I don't understand how one day you can say that if I printed from facebook (which I did) then the coupons are valid, but then the next day you say that all coupons are invalid because someone "hacked" into your system. It is my strong opinion that NO ONE hacked into your system, you just didn't have the correct system implementations. I am sorry I was so excited to see and try to use these coupons.

Post #11

Amanda M. Sullivan Swain (Oklahoma) wrote
about an hour ago

Reply to Amanda
Report

I don't understand you claiming your site was hacked. I added your application and printed off coupons. You reassured us that they were legitimate. I used said coupons. Now, you're claiming fraud? So now the stores will not be reimbursed and will be totally screwed. All the stores are already cracking down on printable coupons and hardly any stores take them. This virtually ensures that no stores will take printables. So much for those of us students who are trying to get by cheaply.

This is absolutely ridiculous. As of yesterday you were claiming they were legitimate if we printed them off of the application.

Post #12

Jean Parks wrote
57 minutes ago

Reply to Jean
Report

I would think that one way of ensuring fairness could be if end users who printed these coupons legitimately could go to their local stores and give the manager their Facebook/and/or check it out signup info. That info could then be submitted by the store along with the coupons. It would be a bit more work but you could then verify membership and reimburse the store appropriately.

At this point I'm sitting here wondering what to do about the things I bought today, things I bought using these coupons and my store card. Should I bag them up and return them? Should I simply go down with my receipts, explain and pay the store and ask that my store card file be noted appropriately? I don't wish to be arrested or banned from stop and shop over this.

Post #13
1 reply

Aimee Jackson (Waco, TX) replied to Larry's post
57 minutes ago

Reply to Aimee
Report

Hey Larry! Just to let you know, I did fill out the form for initiating a class action. I take this so seriously, there are lots of others like me, I kept my receipts from 2007 and saved over 35,000.00 DOLLARS! If this company has impaired my ability to be able to legitimately redeem coupons because they screwed up, I take it very serious.

Post #14

Stefani Reilly (Providence, RI) replied to vm's post
52 minutes ago

Reply to Stefani
Report

Although you have a lot of very angry people who have printed off your coupons and used them successfully, my biggest question is ARE YOU PLANNING ON REIMBURSING THE STORES FOR THE ONES THAT WE HAD ALREADY USED BECAUSE YOU TOLD US THEY WERE LEGITIMATE????? I understand that you as a big marketing firm did not at ALL think about the implications of putting such high value coupons on the site - or for that fact making them PDF's yourself!!! Noone had to hack into any system, when you clicked to print, it BECAME a PDF file!!! I want to make sure that you are planning on paying the stores back??? Is anyone going to answer us on here?? Interesting Marketing Technique!!!

Post #15

Lady Coupon (Silicon Valley, CA) replied to vm's post
50 minutes ago

Reply to Coupon
Report

The overall result of your initial launch has NOT been overwhelmingly successful!!!! After I used legitimate coupons printed from the Check It Out Application at my local grocer, you are now claiming HACKED as your excuse to not honor your coupons? Unbelievable!

Post #16
3 repliesMichelle Oxoxox wrote

44 minutes ago

Part of The problem is the people on SLICKDEALS.NET. Someone saw this and then went there and told everyone and made tons of copies. They have been telling everyone they know about them .Its sad thanks to slickdeals (not everyone)but most abuse the coupon's. Its sad I am a single mom of 3 kids and these coupons wold have helped. Now It seems like everyone has been mislead and used just to get people to come to facebook.

Reply to Michelle
Report

Post #17

Daniel Walker wrote

42 minutes ago

come on now everyone, if your dreams of becoming an internet millionaire just blew away like a fart in the wind, methinks you'd be pulling something like this outta yer azz too.

Glad I wasn't the guy in charge of printing, that's all I'm sayin....

Reply to Daniel
Report

Post #18

Larry Phillips (Texas San Antonio) replied to Aimee's post

41 minutes ago

(It's actually Sara ... DH and I use the same FB account!) Anyway, I save my receipts, but have never added my savings ... I am going to have to do that!!! Thanks for the idea! I will look into filling out the lawsuit form.

On another note:

I am more than a little pissed that I used these coupons this afternoon ... I thought they were going to be honored, and now they will not be. I don't understand how you can blame hackers ...

I agree with Jean - there should be a way to verify that we have legitimate coupons ... and I DO NOT want to see the police at my door because of this mess.

Reply to Larry
ReportPost #19
1 replyAimee Jackson (Waco, TX) replied to Michelle's post

41 minutes ago

Gee Michelle, you dont think AFULLCUP or FatWallet had nothing to do with it? This thing ws all over every couponing website there is. You would have thought their research and developement team would have known about these.

Reply to Aimee
Report

Post #20

Matt Simmons (Dothan, AL) replied to Michelle's post

39 minutes ago

True michelle but when the company was contacted they stated the deals were legit and that they would reimburse people and since the lack of security was wide open, all people had to do was click print and have a pdf in a matter of seconds....it not honest thing to do but the company already had alot of publicity from the initial high dollar coupons like pantene 6.00 off. If said company was worreid about it being duplicated and copied then why in the world would they not prevent someone from printing it with such software to be able to save it in the first place?

It almost seems as they had this planned to revoke their coupons all along. the initial coupons were almost too good to be true and then they gave us the green light and said yes these amazing deals are real and we will honor them. .... .and they knowingly had the door wide open to save them, they could pull back and say all of them are frauds and try to wipe their hands clean of it anytime they wanted.

Reply to Matt
Report

Post #21

Jennifer Pilar wrote

36 minutes ago

There are a TON of other sites that have used/abused these q's, not just slickdeals. What a dumb statement.

Reply to Jennifer
Report

 Post #22	Michelle Oxoxox replied to Aimee's post 35 minutes ago I ABSOULTLY agree.You cant tell me they did not know that this is what was going to happen.I Don't understand why the company (meaning the marketing company) is not held responsible.I am with you now no one can use them .This is a big joke to them if they think were going to just let this go.	Reply to Michelle Report
 Post #23	Jean Parks replied to Michelle's post 33 minutes ago I disagree, the admin's and staff at Slickdeals worked very hard to keep discussion of this offer on the up and up. Security measures included locking/deleting threads, warning and banning members who begged for illegal copies of the coupons. The vast majority were thrilled and grateful and thought check it out was very cool, I saw many,many,many posts urging self-restraint and moderation ion the use of these coupons. Liking a good deal isn't a crime, nor does it mean a person is some sort of thief.	Reply to Jean Report
 Post #24	Cate Smith (Tri-Cities, WA) wrote 32 minutes ago HaHa at blaming Slickdeals! Coupon/savings boards and email loops are a dime a dozen. It just took for these coupons to be issued in the format they were, to start this craziness. Some businesses just do not understand how fast things like this will spread online. The fraud and hacked card is absolutely ridiculous!	Reply to Cate Report
 Post #25	Derek W Antol (Northampton Community College) replied to vm's post 24 minutes ago Yeah this is pretty lame. Nothing was hacked, the coupons were right there in the application. I printed them from there, so my store better get their money for these coupons.	Reply to Derek Report
 Post #26	Stephanie Taylor (UNLV) wrote 20 minutes ago You have yet to answer the question that everyone is posing. Will you reimburse stores for coupons printed a) legitimately from your application and b) used in good faith after you repeatedly stated that they were indeed valid coupons? Do you realize how many people installed this application, used the coupons, and will now be looked at as criminals at their local grocery stores when you lie and tell them that "hackers" broke into your system? Do you even care? How dare you call this a success. Your company reeks of aging marketing types trying to take advantage of a phenomena that they know nothing about. If you don't intend on reimbursing stores, I hope that you get sued by both retailers and consumers. If this is the case, I would love to join in on that class action lawsuit that Aimee is initiating.	Reply to Stephanie Report
 Post #27	Jessika Frye replied to vm's post 16 minutes ago There have been many calls to your company to prove the legitimacy of these coupons and we were told in fact that they were. If our stores do not get reimbursed than it does not matter if you are currently working on offers because many stores will now refuse printables. Thanks that's all I have to say. Coupons are scrutinized enough without your mess up.	Reply to Jessika Report
Daniel Walker wrote 13 minutes ago	Reply to Daniel

Post #28
2 replies

All I'm sayin is NICE HAT LARRY and hola to all my SD friends
AnonaGoober

Report

Post #29

Jean Parks wrote
6 minutes ago

You folks need to alert stores that those who redeemed your coupons up thru monday night did not commit FRAUD.

I called your company on Friday afternoon,spoke with a gentleman in sales who assured me these coupons were good, he encouraged me to use them freely.

I waited over the weekend, then saw your publically posted announcement that you would honor these coupons, then and only then did I venture out to the store this afternoon.

You need to be truthful and honest here... not hurt innocent people who could find themselves in a lot of trouble over this.

Reply to Jean
Report

Post #30

Lori Kropman replied to Daniel's post
4 minutes ago

Hola!! I guess we are heading for the big house cause I just used me some of them fraudulent coupons today that I printed directly from this site. I managed to keep my nose clean for almost 50 years, now I guess I'll become a fugitive. LOL

And yes, Larry, I have to laugh, because the other options are crying or screaming and you won't like me doing either of them, I assure you.

Reply to Lori
Report

1 2 Next